TO ALL CANADIAN JEWRY—GREETINGS

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

It is with a strange admixture of joy and trepidation, of pride and humility that I assume the role of associate contributing editor to the Canadian Jewish Review. Joyous over the opportunity thus presented to utilize the space allotted me each week for the expression and propagation of my views, justly proud in succeeding—both in the pulpit of the deeply-venerated and nobly-bulwarked Holy Blossom and in the columns of the widely circulated and highly acknowledged Review—such worthy predecessors as Rabbis Brickner and Isserman; the former, one of the most esteemed and prominent rabbis in American Israel, the latter, my immediate predecessor and close personal friend through fevered and stormy college days, a man whom this community cannot but deeply regret to lose. In the few days that I have moved among you, I have heard his name from every lip. From Jew and non-Jew, from his congregants within Holy Blossom and his unnumbered friends without, has come nought but lavish praise. His achievement in Toronto, and throughout the Dominion, is familiar to all and needs no formal review. His pioneer labors in the cause of Good Will, undertaken in an alien and not infrequently hostile field, have been heralded far and wide. This highly imperative bit of work, despite all its traducers, will cause his name to be long remembered in this land where already I have been made to feel its vital need. Cynics and scoffers there may be who looked askance at Rabbi Isserman's efforts in this direction, but the Jews of Canada cannot soon forget that to his courage and conviction, his diligence and direction, their status has been immeasurably raised. Nor is his work complete. Alas, this fact has already been brought poignantly home to me. But he has blazed the trail. His simple and open honesty, his unequivocal challenge of every living issue, even though they were oftimes danger surcharged and tabu, his liberal interpretation and intrepid application of religion to the concrete present—none can hope to excel, for he was, in truth, what he always yearned to become, the "articulate conscience" of his people. As his successor, I can but aspire to follow in his footsteps and to carry to its logical fruition the work which he, and Rabbi Brickner as well, so nobly began. This I shall earnestly strive to do and may those who will miss his eloquent speech, his profound and prophetic Judaism, his liberal and hearty humanitarianism rally to my side. To those stalwart and emancipated spirits who made his cause their own, I send the assurance that the keynote which he sounded, the modern and liberal and significant message of Holy Blossom will not be silenced.

Proud am I, therefore, of following in the wake of such traditions, but humbled, none the less, before the enormity of the task—weekly undertake the gigantic responsibility of adding something worthy, something vital, something telling to the "fifty odd thousand words which the average city dweller peruses each and every day of his life". In this age when words are used so much and so indiscriminately, when they flow from the press in such ceaseless streams, "flat and soggy like endless seas", it seems presumptuous even to take pen in hand. I can but

CONDITIONS IN PALESTINE

The disturbances in Palestine have been quelled. The British military reinforcements have the situation well in hand. There are isolated attacks here and there, but attempts at major manoeuvers by the Arabs quickly come to grief.

It is impossible, as yet, to estimate the extent of the damage wrought to Jewish property. Surveys will no doubt be made which will appraise the losses and indicate the necessary course for reconstruction. It must be borne in mind, however, that ordinary economic norms will not apply to the situation in Palestine. The settlement is a young one, and therefore more susceptible to permanent injury than a more matured and robust community would be. It should also be remembered that Jewish property in Palestine means more than economic assets. Much of it, even though privately owned, represents collective Jewish endeavor. It represents pioneering effort, and is to be regarded as an earnest of the Jewish determination to build up a homeland. Any blow directed at Jewish possessions in Palestine is really a blow at the Jewish hope for national rehabilitation.

The British Government has sent a commission to investigate the situation. It will check up on its policies in the light of the recent events, and changes may be expected that will tend to eliminate the recurrence of riots.

The Zionists too, for their part, will have to face the facts squarely, and perhaps do a great deal of revising of their policies and tactics. The catastrophe will surely not be without its lessons.

At the present time, however, the prime task is to provide relief for the afflicted ones, and this is not a matter of Zionism. It is simply a matter of humanism. The cry is for bread and medicine. This is a cry that is understood even by people who cannot or do not wish to listen to the appeal of Jewish nationalism.

THE APPEAL FOR RELIEF

The Toronto Jews have organized themselves for the purpose of raising funds for Palestine relief.

The campaign that will be launched will not be a Zionist campaign. In making its appeal for support it will not emphasize ideas of Jewish nationalism or cultural values. It will talk the language or philanthropy.

There are Jews who are moved when they are urged to give money for derelict juveniles, or sick mothers, or neglected old folks. When asked for money for such causes they seem to feel it their duty to worry about the plight of others, and to offer assistance.

To them the simple plea is now made:

"There are orphans; there are widows; there are people without bread. Their own communities are too poor to take care of them. Somebody has to provide for them. You who are financially secure must assume the responsibility. What will you do about it? Let the afflicted ones die of hunger and for want of medicine or shelter? You are a believer in charity. You cannot renounce your charitable instincts in this case."

In Paris they are wearing

Our Millinery Buyer, recently returned from the Continent, not only tells of the new type of Millinery Paris is wearing, and how they are wearing it—but shows the identical models and fabrics. You may see them at Morgan's, and keep apace with Paris.

Away-from-the-face—shallow crowns—are worn exclusively. These hats have a most interesting way of extending low in the back, and of coaxing a fold or elongation at one side, or both.

Felt leads the way, with soleil, velours and velvet following in importance—combine any two together and the result is unequalled smartness.

Illustrated:

A Marie Alphonsine model (from our Millinery Salon) shows the shallow crown and the off-the-face-line that Paris acclaims.

By Lewis a 'highbrow' hat of soleil, with swirling folds extending across the back and down deep on one side. A white feather tab creates interest.

New Hospital Will Relieve Crowded Conditions

Premier L. A. Taschereau, Mayor Camillien Houde and Hon. Athanase David, provincial secretary, have written to the joint hospital campaign chairman, Allan Bronfman and Michael Hirsch in approval of the new hospital project. Letters were received from Sir Henry M. W. Gray, Col. Herbert Molson, president of the Montreal General Hospital; Dr. H. L. Reddy, superintendent and obstetrician-in-chief of the Woman's General Hospital; Dr. S. Boucher, director of the department of health for the city of Montreal; and Dr. A. K. Haywood, superintendent of the Montreal General Hospital. Dr. Haywood issued a statement to the press deploring the situation as it exists in regard to hospital accommodation in the city. He pointed out that the General Hospital operated at 94% of its capacity all last year when hospital associations recognise that a hospital operated at over 80% is in an emergency state. Dr. Haywood said that on many occasions the General Hospital had to refuse to send out an ambulance for people seriously ill or injured because they did not have a spare bed. The demand is so great that, instead of allowing 24 hours between the evacuation of one patient and the admission of another, they could only allow two hours.

Among those present at a meeting of women workers were Mrs. M. Lefcort and Mrs. M. Rhsovitch from Bikur Cholim; Mrs. S. Cooperstone, B'Nai Jacob Sisterhood; Mrs. L. Marcus, Mrs. Wostross and Mrs. S. L. Fine, Daughters of Israel Charitable Society; Mrs. Samuel Kahn and Mrs. H. H. Livingstone, Hadassah; Mrs. M. Taube and Mrs. R. Marriages

Ein-Greenblatt

The marriage of Gertrude, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Greenblatt, Marlowe Avenue, to Moe Roy Ein, son of S. Ein, formerly of Glace Bay, was solemnized Sunday, September 1, in the Prince of Wales Salon of the Windsor Hotel. Rabbi Julius Berger officiated. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of peanut colored satin with a deeper shade of roses outlining the neckline in the back. It was made with a draped waistline and large petalled panels formed the skirt. Her veil of net was fastened with a cap of pearls and orange blossoms and she carried orchids and lilies-of-the-valley. Mrs. William Rivenovich, as matron of honour wore a white moiré gown with a short, fitted waistline and circular skirt edged with silk net. Her hat of American Beauty chiffon velvet and shoes matched and she carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses. The bridesmaids, whose satin gowns were modeled on the same lines as the brides; wore silk lace veils in matching shades. They were Mrs. Eddie Housman, of Pittsburgh, in green; Miss Cecil Greenblatt, sister of the bride, amberglow, and Miss Jeannette Ein, sister of the groom, bluette. They all carried nosegays of rose and orchid petals. Dr. Joe Brody, of New York, was best man and the groosmen were Edward Housman, Ben Greenblatt and Wallie Ein, of New York. The flower girl, Edys Rivenovich, wore daffodil yellow georgette with flounces and carried a basket of yellow rose petals. Joel Rivenovich as page boy wore a black and oyster colored satin suit. Mrs. M. Rivn, of Buffalo, who attended the groom, wore a peach satin gown, a mohair hat with peach velvet ribbon and carried a bouquet of tea roses. Mrs. Greenblatt, mother of the bride, was gowned in black panne velvet with shirred waistline, and skirt of semi-spiral flounces. With it she wore a black panne velvet hat and a corsage of roses. Out-of-town guests were Mrs. Gold, of Glace Bay; Phil Ein, and Dr. Dworkin, of Boston, Miss Fanny Gold, of Glace Bay; Miss Regina Wener, of New York; Dr. Sam Riven, of Ann Harbor, Mich., Mrs. Roth, of Pittsburgh; A. $30,000 For Palestine Relief To Date

Elijah Silverstone Gives $5000

About $20,000 has been forwarded for Palestine relief to the Palestine Emergency Fund.

In response to an appeal from Zionist Headquarters in London, $10,000 was cabled through the Emergency Fund under the chairmanship of Mrs. A. J. Freiman, of Ottawa. This sum will be distributed in Palestine. Contributions are received by the Emergency Fund at 310 Sherbrooke Street West.

Among those who have contributed to the fund to aid the sufferers is Miss Helen R. Y. Reid, social service teacher. With her cheque she enclosed a letter offering sympathy "in this season of trial and tribulation," and observing that the world could not sufficiently praise the work of "regeneration" so far accomplished by the Jews in Palestine since the Balfour Declaration.

A baby home sponsored by the local Hadassah Women's Zionist Organization in Palestine lay within the danger zone, and the sixty infants in the institution have had to be moved to the centre of Jerusalem. The cable stated that funds are badly needed, and the Emergency Fund authorities immediately forwarded $2,000.

The Emergency Fund is being raised in all parts of the Dominion with local agencies in all the large centres. Jacob Kellert is the chairman of the local agency, with A. Levin as treasurer, and Harry Batshaw secretary. An indication of the universal appeal made by the fund is to be seen in a letter received September 5, by headquarters. It came from a small town in New Brunswick, in which three Jewish families live. A miniature campaign was "organized" in this town, and the proceeds were forwarded here.

Appeals for contributions to the fund were made from all the local synagogue pulpits. Mrs. A. J. Freiman and Mrs. Anna Selick, of Toronto, officers of the Hadassah, addressed gatherings in Ontario.

Additional contributions to the fund, reported in last week's REVIEW were: E. M. Berliner, $1,000; S. Levinson, $500; J. Levinson, jr., $500; J. Levinson, Sr., $200; Z. Levinson, $100; H. Kellert and Sons, Ltd., $500; A. Sommer, $500; M. M. Sperber, $250; Mark Workman, $2,000; Bronfman interests, $2,000; Lyon Cohen, $1,000; Isaac I. Bruck, $500; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hart,

Young Judaea Convention Condemns Palestine Affairs

The seventh convention of the Federation of Young Judaea of Canada, which was held in Hamilton, August 31st to Septemebr 2nd, was the first official Zionist gathering in Canada to express itself in condemnation of the barbaric pogroms of the Arabs and the criminal negligence of the Palestine Administration. All festivities were suspended and the program of the convention was altered. One of the first steps taken was the resolution adopted in favour of employing a full-time field worker to travel from centre to centre to inculcate the principles of Zionism. For the opening session there were present 160 delegates. Addresses of welcome were delivered by Herman B. Lightstone, president of Hamilton Young Judaea; Mrs. Cantor, Hamilton Senior Hadassah; Miss Rose Halpern, Hamilton Junior Hadassah; Dr. A. A. Feldman, Hamilton Zionist Organization, and Mrs. Frishman representing Council of Jewish Women of Hamilton. The resolution in condemnation of the Arabs was presented to the convention by the Lionel M. Gelber, of Toronto. At the conclusion of the reading of the resolution those present rose and stood in silence followed by the singing of "Hatikvoh." The presidential address, delivered by Samuel Chait, of Montreal, outlined clearly the position which Young Judaea as an institution should take in Jewish life and stressed the fact that particularly in America, where Jewish youth finds itself in an environment of crass materialism, such a movement was all the more necessary. Prior to the official opening a round table conference and tea was held at the Wentworth Arms Hotel, where A. B. Bennett, of Toronto, contributing editor of the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW addressed the delegates on the Extended Jewish Agency, which he condemned as bad nationalism and bad business. Abraham M. Klein, educational director of Canadian Young Judaea, who spoke on the present situation in Zionism, paying particular attention to the difficulties in Palestine at the present moment, maintained with reference to the Jewish Agency, that not only was it good diplomacy but also the final consummation of nationalism in Jewish life. A luncheon was given the delegates by the Hamilton Senior Hadassah, at which Harold Minden, of Hamilton, addressed the Judaeans on the Palestine Mandate and its reference to the present situation in the Holy Land. Sunday evening, following a tea and musicale given by the Rebecca Kohut Club, a debate was held between Montreal and Toronto Young Judaea on the subject "Resolved that at the expiration of the mandate it would be advisable to establish Palestine as a Seventh Dominion of the British Empire." The decision was awarded to the Toronto debaters, Eli Bohnen and Irving Sherman, who upheld the affirmative of the argument. Goldie Yelin and Charles Rosen were the Montreal debaters. Monday noon Hamilton Junior Hadassah were hostesses to the delegates at a luncheon, at which David Robinson, of Hamilton, spoke on Dr. Theodor Herzl. The convention went on record as favouring the establishment of a Canadian Young Judaea Scholarship fund at the Hebrew University, campaigns to be held yearly until the required amount is raised.

Samuel Chait was unanimously re-elected president of the organization; Lionel Gelber of Toronto, first vice-president; Norman Genser, of Saskatoon, second vice-president, A. Ralph Isaacs, of St. John, third vice-president; and Louis Schwartz, of Montreal, honourary secretary-treasurer. The following were elected to the Administrative Committee: Rae Berlin, Lillian Benjamin, Joseph Frank, Charles Rosen, Miriam Carpin, Benjamin Caplan, Sam Abramsun, Montreal; Wm. Gass, St. John; Ada Cohen, Beck Cohen, Murray Sandler, Dr. Mark Zimmerman, Roy Shapiro, Toronto; Bertha Minden, Herman B. Lightstone, Dr. Sam Rosen, Hamilton; Cecile Blumes, Rose Apter, Winnipeg; Max Zaitlen, Saskatoon; Belle E. Milner, Regina.

The Convention was concluded by a Banquet at the Royal Connaught Hotel Monday evening. Sam Kronick, of Toronto, urged the Young Judaeans to prepare themselves for service in national and international affairs in Jewry. Samuel Chait was toastmaster Toasts given: To the Guests, Miss Bertha Minden, secretary Hamilton Young Judaea, answered by Miss Cecile Blumes, of Winnipeg; to Hadassah Dr. M. Zimmerman, Toronto, answered by Miss Miriam Carpin; to Palestine, Wm. Guss, of St. John, answered by Abraham M. Klein; to the Zionist Organization, Max Freedman, of Saskatoon, replied to by I. Segal, of the Hamilton Zionist Organization; to Young Judaea, Harold Minden, of Hamilton, answered by Lionel M. Gelber. Rabbi A. A. Feldman, of Hamilton, spoke and A. Duker brought greetings from the Avukah Organization of America. Chairmen of committees were; on education, Abraham M. Klein; organization and finance, Lionel M. Gelber; resolutions, Max Freedman; nominations, Moe Bauman.

Messages were received from Mrs. A. J. Freiman, President Canadian Hadassah; Lyon Cohen and A. Levin, of Montreal, and M. J. Finkelstein, of Winnipeg, honourary vice-presidents of the Zionist Organization of Canada; Montreal Hadassah;

HADASSAH

The inscription of the names of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Alexandor in the Golden Book was made in honour of the occasion of their 25th wedding anniversary. The name of the new-born daughter of Mrs. B. Kahn, former president of Montreal Hadassah, will be similarly honoured.

Prior to the Council Meeting was in session a telegram was received from Kelowna, B. C., a very small community announcing the dispatch of a cheque to the Palestine Relief Fund. The Council heard of the illness of one of its workers, Mrs. A. H. Rabin, who is confined to the General Hospital, as the result of severe burns.

A joint meeting of Montreal Hadassah will be held at the Y. M. H. A. Auditorium Monday evening, Sept. 9th. Allan Bronfman will speak for the hospital campaign.

Montreal Hadassah met in Council, Thursday afternoon, Sept. 5th, at Zionist Headquarters. Mrs. A. J. Freiman, Dominion president, presented Mrs. L. Miller, retiring chairman, with a loving cup.

Mrs. L. Miller read the financial report for the year, which shows an increase of $750 over last year. 1,015 members were registered during the last term. Total receipts for 1928-29 were $21,282.

Mrs. H. H. Livingstone was installed as chairman.

Other visitors were Mrs. Anna Selick of Toronto, Mrs. Gurman of Saskatoon, and Mrs. Nathanson, of Glace Bay.

Mrs. L. Livingstone announced that the former Junior Chapter of Shaar Hashamayhim, has elected to join the senior body.

COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi HARRY J. STERN, of Montreal,
Associate Contributing Editor

"WHY I AM A JEW"

A little volume has reached my desk entitled—"Why I am a Jew". The author—Edmond Fleg, is one of the great sons of French Jewry, who is laboring in the cause of a Jewish renaissance in France. Fleg dedicates this book to his grandson who is not yet born. And in reality, the volume is a narrative of a Jew who once ran away from his people and faith. For Fleg, like unto Nordau and Herzl, attempted to resign from the Jewish race. He now tells his story how after a study of agnosticism, atheism and other isms—he rediscovered the truth of truths—Judaism. It is a wonderful tale of intellectual wrestling and spiritual suffering, and conveys a lesson to those who are still naive enough to escape Judaism. Here are some of the reasons Fleg gives for being a Jew:

"I am a Jew because born of Israel and having lost it, I felt it revive within me more alive than I am myself.

I am a Jew because born of Israel, and having found it again, I would have it live after me even more alive than it is within me.

I am a Jew because the faith of Israel demands no abdication of my mind.

I am a Jew because the faith of Israel asks every possible sacrifice of my soul.

I am a Jew because in all places where there are tears and suffering the Jew weeps.

I am a Jew because in every age when the cry of despair is heard the Jew hopes.

I am a Jew because the message of Israel is the most ancient and the most modern.

I am a Jew because Israel's promise is a universal promise.

I am a Jew because for Israel the world is not finished; men will complete it.

I am a Jew because for Israel man is not yet created; men are creating him.

I am a Jew because Israel places Man and his Unity above nations and above Israel itself.

I am a Jew because above Man, image of the Divine Unity, Israel places the unity which is divine."

"Will you accept it, my child? Will you transmit it? Perhaps you will want to desert it. Then may it be for a greater truth if there be one. I could not then reproach you. It would be my fault; for I could not have handed it on to you as I received it. But whether you abandon it, or whether you treasure it, Israel will march on unto the end of days."

ELLUL DAYS

This is the month of Ellul. In the old Jewish life this month brought introspection and reflection. It was a month spent in spiritual preparation for the Yomim Noroim. The individual's speed was therefore lessened. A halt was called to one's rush after the material. The Jew entered the sanctuary of his soul and sought to be at one with his God. Even in the old Shul in Ellul were heard the sounds of the Shofar summoning the Jew to reach out for the higher life. Who can forget those selichos chants that used to be heard during these Ellul days? Who of the older generation does not remember the mystery and majesty of the Ellul days in the Ghetto? But today, alas, Ellul comes and departs. It seems to make little impression upon the masses of Jewry. It is just another date in the wall calendar. And when Rosh Hashonah does arrive, at last, the Jew thus finds himself unprepared to receive its spiritual lessons and implications. Ellul days—how meaningless these have become for many Jews! Modern life has indeed robbed us of many precious and classic Jewish institutions. Among these may be included the Ellul days.

The Rise of David Levinsky

A Novel by Abraham Cahan

By arrangement with HARPER and BROTHERS, Copyright.

"I will, I will," I said, ardently.

"One mustn't do business on a sed-dight. It isn't right."

"Give it to him, pa!" Fanny cut in.

"I am not joking," Kaplan persisted. "One has got to be a Jew. Excuse me, David, for speaking like that, but you're going to be as good as a son of mine and I have a right to talk to you in this way."

"Why, of course, you have!" I answered, with filial docility.

His lecture bored me, but it did me good, too. It was sweet to hear myself called "as good as a son" by this man of Talmudic education who was at the same time a man of substance and of excellent family.

The chicken was served. My intended wife ate voraciously, biting lustily and chewing with gusto. The sight of it jarred on me somewhat, but I overruled myself. "It's all right," I thought. "She's a healthy girl. She'll make me a strong mate, and she'll bear me healthy children."

I had a temptation to take her in my arms and kiss her. "I am not in love with her, and yet I am so happy," I thought. "Oh, love isn't essential to happiness. Not at all. Our old generation is right."

Fanny's reading, which was only an occasional performance, was confined to the cheapest stories published. Even the popular novels of the day, the "best sellers," seemed to be beyond her depth. Her intellectual range was not much wider than that of her old-fashioned mother, whose literary attainments were restricted to the reading of the Yiddish Commentary on the Pentateuch. She often interrupted me or her mother; everybody except her father. But all this seemed to be quite natural and fitting. "She is expected to be a wife, a mother, and a housekeeper," I reflected, "and that she will know how to be. Everything else is nonsense. I don't want to discuss Spencer with her, do I?"

Kaplan quoted the opening words of a passage in the Talmud bearing upon piety as the bulwark of happiness. I took it up, finishing the passage for him.

"See?" he said to his wife. "I have told you he remembers his Talmud pretty well, haven't I?"

"When a man has a good head he has a good head," she returned, radiantly.

Rubie went to a public school, but he spent three or four hours every afternoon at an old-fashioned Talmudic academy, or "yeshivah." There were no such "yeshivahs" on the East Side, and they were attended by boys of the most orthodox families in the Ghetto. I had never met such boys before. That an American school-boy should read Talmud seemed a joke to me. I could not take Rubie's holy studies seriously. As we now sat at the table I banteringly asked him about the last page he had read. He answered my question, and at his father's command he ran up-stairs, into the back parlor, where stood two huge bookcases filled with glittering folios of the Talmud and other volumes of holy lore, and came back with one containing the page he had named.

"Find it and let David see what you can do," his father said.

Rubie complied, reading the text and interpreting it in Yiddish precisely as I should have done when I was eleven years old. He even gesticulated and swayed backward and forward as I used to do. To complete the picture, his mother, watching him, beamed as my mother used to do when she watched me reading at the Preacher's Synagogue or at home in our wretched basement. I was deeply affected.

"He's all right!" I said.

"He's a loafer, just the same," his father said, gaily. "If he had as much appetite for his Talmud as he has for his school-books he would really be all right."

"What do you want of him?" Malkah interceded. "Doesn't he work hard enough as it is? He hardly has an hour's rest."

"There you have it! I didn't speak respectfully enough of her 'only son.' I beg your pardon, Malkah," Mr. Kaplan said, facetiously.

The wedding had been set for one of the half-holidays included in the Feast of Tabernacles, about six months later. Mr. Kaplan said something about her plans concerning the event. Fanny objected. Her mother insisted, and it looked like an altercation, when the head of the family called them to order.

"And where are you going for your honeymoon, Fanny?" asked Mary.

"That's none of your business," her sister retorted.

"She's stuck up because she's going to be married," Mary jeered.

"Shut your mouth," her father growled.

"Do you know my idea of a honeymoon?" said I. "That is, if it were possible if Russia didn't have that accursed government of hers. We should take a trip to Antomir."

"Wouldn't that be lovely!" said Fanny. "We would stop in Paris, wouldn't we?"

Fanny and her mother resumed their discussion of the preparations for the wedding. I scarcely listened, yet I was thrilled. I gazed at Fanny, trying to picture her as the mother of my first child. "If it's a girl she'll be named for mother, of course," I mused. I reflected with mortification that my mother's name could not be left in its original form, but would have to be Americanized, and for the moment this seemed to be a matter of the gravest concern to me.

My attitude toward Fanny and our prospective marriage was primitive enough, and yet our engagement had an ennobling effect on me. I was in a lofty mood. My heart sang of motives higher than the mere feathering of my own nest. The vision of working for my wife and children somehow induced a yearning for altruism in a broader sense. While free from vestige of religion, in the ordinary meaning of the word, I was tingling with a religious ecstasy that was based on a sense of public duty. The Synagogue of the Sons of Antomir seemed to represent not a creed, but unselfishness. I donated generously to it. Also, I subscribed a liberal sum to an East Side hospital of which Kaplan was a member, and to other institutions. The sum I gave to the hospital was so large that it made a stir, and a conservative Yiddish daily printed my photograph and a short sketch of my life. I thought of the promise I had given Naphtali, before leaving Antomir, to send him a "ship ticket." I had thought of it many times before, but I had never even sought to discover his whereabouts. This time, however, I throbbed with a firm resolution to get his address, and, in case he was poor, to bring him over and liberally provide for his future.

My wedding loomed as the beginning of a new era in my life. It appealed to my imagination as a new birth, like my coming to America. I looked forward to it with mixed awe and bliss.

Three or four months later, however, something happened that played havoc with that feeling.

BOOK XII

MISS TEVKIN

CHAPTER 1

On a Saturday morning in August I took a train for Tannersville, Catskill Mountains, where the Kaplan family had a cottage. I was to stay with them over Sunday. I had been expected to be there the day before, but had been detained, August being part of our busiest season. While in the smoking-car it came over me that from Kaplan's point of view my journey was a flagrant violation of the Sabbath and that it was sure to make things awkward. Whether my riding on Saturday would actually offend his religious sensibilities or not (for in America one gets used to seeing such sins committed even by the faithful), it was certain to offend his sense of the respect I owed him. And so, to avoid a sullen reception I decided to stop overnight in another Catskill town and not to make my appearance at Tannersville until the following day.

The insignificant change was pregnant with momentous results.

It was lunch-time when I alighted from the train, amid a hubbub of gay voices. Women and children were greeting their husbands and fathers who had come from the city to join them for the week-end. I had never been to the mountains before, nor practically ever taken a day's vacation. It was so full of ozone, so full of health giving balm, it was almost overpowering. I was inhaling it in deep, intoxicating gulps. It gave me a pleasure so keen it seemed to verge on pain. It was so unlike the air I had left in the sweltering city that the place seemed to belong to another planet.

I stopped at the Rigi Kulm House. There were several other hotels or boarding-houses in the village, and all of them except one were occupied by our people, the Rigi Kulm being the largest and most expensive hostelry in the neighborhood. It was crowded, and I had to content myself with sleeping-accommodations in one of the near-by cottages in which the hotel-keeper hired rooms for his overflow business, taking my meals in the hotel.

The Rigi Kulm stood at the end of the village and my cottage was across the main country road from it. Both were on high ground. Viewed from the veranda of the hotel, the village lay to the right and the open country, a fascinating landscape of meadowland, timbered hills, and a brook that lost itself in a grove—to the left. The mountains rose in two ranges, one in front of the hotel and one in the rear.

The bulk of the boarders at the Rigi Kulm was made up of families of cloak-manufacturers, shirt-manufacturers, ladies'-waist-manufacturers, cigar-manufacturers, clothiers, furriers, jewelers, leather-goods men, real-estate men, physicians, dentists, lawyers—in most cases people who had blossomed out into nabobs in the course of the last few years. The crowd was ablaze with diamonds, painted cheeks, and bright-colored silks. It was a babel of blatant self-consciousness, a miniature of the parvenu smugness that had spread like wild-fire over the country after a period of need and low spirits.

In addition to families who were there for the whole season—that is, from the Fourth of July to the first Monday in October—the hotel contained a considerable number of single young people, of both sexes—salesmen, stenographers, bookkeepers, librarians—who came for a fortnight's vacation. These were known as "two-weekers." They occupied tiny rooms, usually two girls or two men in a room. Each of these girls had a large supply of dresses and shirtwaists of the latest style, and altogether the two weeks' vacation ate up, in many cases, the savings of months.

To be sure, the "two-weekers" of the gentle sex were not the only marriage able young women in the place. They had a number of heiresses to compete with.

I was too conspicuous a figure in the needle industries for my name to be unknown to the guests of a hotel like the Rigi Kulm House. Moreover, several of the people I found there were my personal acquaintances. One of these was Nodelman's cousin, Mrs. Kaleh, or Auntie Yetta, the gaunt, childless woman of the solemn countenance and the gay disposition, of the huge gold teeth, and the fingers heavily laden with diamonds. I had not seen her for months. As the lessee of the hotel marched me into his great dining-room she rushed out to me, her teeth aglitter with hospitality, and made me take a seat at a table which she shared with her husband, the moving-van man, and two middle-aged women. I could see that she had not heard of my engagement, and to avoid awkward interrogations concerning the whereabouts of my fiancée I omitted to announce it.

"I know what you have come here for," she said, archly. "You can't fool Auntie Yetta. But you have come to the right place. I can tell you that a larger assortment of beautiful young ladies you never saw, Mr. Levinsky. And they're educated, too. If you don't find your predestined one here you'll never find her. What do you say, Mr. Riveaman?" she addressed the proprietor of the hotel, who stood by and whom I had known for many years.

"I agree with you thoroughly, Mrs. Kaleh," he answered, smilingly. "But Mr. Levinsky tells me he can stay only one day with us."

"Plenty of time for a smart man to pick a girl in a place like this. Besides, you just tell him that you have a lot of fine, educated young ladies, Mr. Riveaman. He is an educated gentleman, Mr. Levinsky is, and if he knows the kind of boarders you have he'll stay longer."

"I know Mr. Levinsky is an educated man," Riveaman answered. "As for our boarders, they're all first-superfine."

"So you've got to find your predestined one here," she resumed, turning to me again. "Otherwise you can't leave this place. See?"

"But suppose I have found her already—elsewhere?"

"You had no business to. Anyhow, if she doesn't know enough to hold you tight and you are here to spend a week-end with other girls, she does not deserve to have you."

"But I am not spending it with other girls."

"What else did you come here for?" And she screwed up one-half of her face into a wink so grotesque that I could not help bursting into laughter.

About an hour after lunch I sat in a rocking-chair on the front porch, gazing at the landscape. The sky was a blue so subtle and so noble that it seemed as though I had never seen such a sky before. "This is just the kind of place for God to live in," I mused. Whereupon I decided that this was what was meant by the word heaven, whereas the blue overhanging the city was a "mere sky." The village was full of blinding, scorching sunshine, yet the air was entrancingly refreshing. The veranda was almost deserted, most of the women being in their rooms, gossiping or dressing for the arrival of their husbands, fathers, sweethearts, or possible sweethearts. Birds were embroidering the silence of the hour with a silvery whisper that spoke of rest and good-will. The slender brook to the left of me was droning like a bee. Everything was charged with peace and soothing mystery. A feeling of lassitude descended upon me. I was too lazy even to think, but the landscape was continually forcing images on my mind. A hollow in the slope of one of the mountains in front of me looked for all the world like a huge spoon. Half of it was dark, while the other half was full of golden light. It seemed as though it was the sun's favorite spot. "The enchanted spot," I named it. I tried to imagine that oval-shaped hollow at night. I visioned a company of ghosts tiptoeing their way to it and stealing a night's lodging in the "spoon," and later, at the approach of dawn, behold! the ghosts were flying to the woods near by.

Rising behind that mountain was the timbered peak of another one. It looked like the fur cap of a monster, and I wondered what that monster was thinking of.

When I gazed at the mountain directly opposite the hotel I had a feeling of disappointment. I knew that it was very high, that it took hours to climb it, but I failed to realize it. It was seemingly quite low and commonplace. Darkling at the foot of it was what looked like a moat choked with underbrush and weeds. The spot was about a mile and a half from the hotel, yet it seemed to be only a minute's walk from me. But then a bird that was flying over that moat at the moment, winging its way straight across it, was apparently making no progress. Was this region exempt from the laws of space and distance? The bewitching azure of the sky and the divine taste of the air seemed to bear out a feeling that it was exempt from any law of nature with which I was familiar. The mountain-peak directly opposite the hotel looked weird now. Was it peopled with Lilliputians?

Another bird made itself heard somewhere in the underbrush flanking the brook. It was saying something in querulous accents. I knew nothing of birds, and the song or call of this one sounded so queer to me that I was almost frightened. All of which tended to enhance the uncanny majesty of the whole landscape.

Presently I heard Mrs. Kalch calling to me. She was coming along the veranda, resplendent in a purple dress, a huge diamond breastpin, and huge diamond earrings.

"All alone? All alone?" she exclaimed, as she paused, interlocking her bediamonded fingers in a posture of mock amazement. "All alone? Aren't you ashamed of yourself to sit moping out here, when there are so many pretty young ladies around? Come along; I'll find you one or two as sweet as sugar," kissing the tips of her fingers.

"Thank you, Mrs. Kalch, but I like it here."

"Mrs. Kalch! Auntie Yetta, you mean." And the lumps of gold in her mouth glinted good-naturedly.

"Very well, Auntie Yetta."

"That's better. Wait! Wait'll I come back."

She vanished. Presently she returned and, grabbing me by an arm, stood me up and convoyed me half-way around the hotel to a secluded spot on the rear porch where four girls were chatting quietly.

"Perhaps you'll find your predestined one among these," she said.

"But I have found her already," I protested, with ill-concealed annoyance.

She took no heed of my words. After introducing me to two of the girls and causing them to introduce me to the other two, she said:

"And now go for him, young ladies! You know who Mr. Levinsky is, don't you! It isn't some kike. It's David Levinsky, the cloak-manufacturer. Don't miss your chance. Try to catch him."

"I'm ready," said Miss Lazar, a pretty brunette in white.

"She's all right," declared Auntie Yetta. "Her tongue cuts like a knife that has just been sharpened, but she's as good as gold."

"Am I? I ain't so sure about it. You had better look out, Mr. Levinsky," the brunette in white warned me.

"Why, that just makes it interesting," I returned. "Danger is tempting, you know. How are you going to catch me—with a net or a trap?"

Auntie Yetta interrupted us. "I'm off," she said, rising to go. "I can safely leave you in their hands, Mr. Levinsky. They'll take care of you," she said, with a wink, as she departed.

"You haven't answered my question," I said to Miss Lazar.

"What was it?"

"She has a poor memory, don't you know," laughed a girl in a yellow shirt-waist. She was not pretty, but she had winning blue eyes and her yellow waist became her. "Mr. Levinsky wants to know if you're going to catch him with a net or with a trap."

"And how about yourself?" I demanded. "What sort of tools have you?"

"Oh, I don't think I have a chance with a big fish like yourself," she replied.

Her companions laughed.

"Well, that's only her way of fishing," said Miss Lazar. "She tells every fellow she has no chance with him. That's her way of getting started. You'd better look out, Mr. Levinsky."

"And her way is to put on airs and look as if she could have anybody she wanted," retorted the one of the blue eyes.

"Stop, girls," said a third, who was also interesting. "If we are going to gave away one another's secrets there'll be no chance for any of us."

I could see that their thrusts contained more fact than fiction and more venom than gaiety, but it was all laughed off and everybody seemed to be on the best of terms with everybody else. I looked at this bevy of girls, each attractive in her way, and I became aware of the fact that I was not in the least tempted to flirt with them. "I am a well-behaved, sedate man now, and all because I am engaged," I congratulated myself. "There is only one woman in the world for me, and that is Fanny, my Fanny, the girl that is going to be my wife in a few weeks from to-day."

Directly in front of us and only a few yards off was a tennis-court. It was unoccupied at first, but presently there appeared two girls with rackets and balls and they started to play. One of these arrested my attention violently, as it were. I thought her strikingly interesting and pretty. I could not help gazing at her in spite of the eyes that were watching me, and she was growing on me rapidly. It seemed as though absolutely everything about her made a strong appeal to me. She was tall and stately with a fine pink complexion and an effective mass of chestnut hair. I found that her face attested intellectual dignity and a kindly disposition. I liked her white, strong teeth. I liked the way she closed her lips and I liked the way she opened them into a smile; the way she ran to meet the ball and the way she betrayed disappointment when she missed it. I still seemed to be congratulating myself upon my indifference to women other than the one who was soon to bear my name, when I became conscious of a mighty interest in this girl. I said to myself that she looked refined from head to foot and that her movements had a peculiar rhythm that was irresistible.

Physically her cast of features was scarcely prettier than Fanny's, for my betrothed was really a good-looking girl, but spiritually there was a world of difference between their faces, the difference between a Greek statue and one of those lay figures that one used to see in front of cigar-stores.

The other tennis-player was a short girl with a long face. I reflected that if she were a little taller or her face were not so long she might not be uninteresting, and that by contrast with her companion she looked homelier than she actually was.

Miss Lazar watched me closely.

"Playing tennis is one way of fishing for fellows," she remarked.

"So the racket is really a fishing-tackle in disguise, is it?" I returned. "But where are the fellows?"

"Aren't you one?"

"No."

"Oh, these two girls go in for highbrow fellows," said a young woman who had hitherto contented herself with smiling and laughing. "They're highbrow themselves."

"Do they use big words?" I asked.

"Well, they're well read. I'll say that for them," observed Miss Lazar, with a fine display of fairness.

"College girls?"

"Only one of them."

"Which?"

"Guess."

"The tall one."

"I thought she'd be the one you'd pick. You'll have to guess again."

"What made you think I'd pick her for a college girl?"

"You'll have to guess that. Well, she is an educated girl, all the same."

She volunteered the further information that the tall girl's father was a writer, and, as though anxious lest I should take him too seriously, she hastened to add:

"He doesn't write English, though. It's Jewish, or Hebrew, or something."

"What's his name?" I asked.

"Terkin," she answered, under her breath.

Isaac was an elderly man, and was troubled with an intense pain in his right foot. He went to a specialist whose "bedside technic" consisted in trying to laugh away patient's fears. "You see," said the doctor jovially, "you're getting along in years, and that foot has done so much traveling that you can hardly blame it for aching that way."

"Yes," agreed Isaac acidly, "but the other foot has done just as much traveling, and it doesn't act that way."

OUR CHILDREN

Subscribers of THE CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW are invited to send in pictures of their lovely children. Give the full name, age, address and names of his parents. There is no age limit for children. THE ROSSENS

It is with regret that I learn of Samuel Rossen's resignation as Superintendent of The Montreal Hebrew Orphans Home. Mr. Rossen and his devoted wife have indeed been more than parents to the large number of parentless children sheltered in the institution. And I am sorry for the little ones who have come to love Father Rossen, and Mother Rossen. These will certainly miss the Superintendent and his wife even more than the officials who are the guardians of the Orphanage. Mr. Rossen and his wife are both intellectually inclined. They know social service work. They are people of refinement. Above all, they know and understand the psychology of the child. And the finest tribute that I can pay them is to say—"They will certainly be much missed." They are leaving Montreal —my blessings and good wishes to friends and kindred spirits.

Levinson sent a check to a Jewish firm to pay for goods, but the check was returned because Levinson had deducted the discount although the payment was 15 days overdue. A few days later the firm sent one of the partners over to see Levinson. It happened that this partner was eccentric and was dressed very shabbily. When Levinson's secretary saw him she informed her boss that a shabby man wished to see him.

"I don't want to be bothered with a schnorrer!" Levinson cried.

On hearing this the creditor walked right in and said: "You want me to give you a discount when you send your check 15 days late—and I'm the schnorrer, eh?"

Every Friday

One of the unique spots of the world extends itself for miles before the astonished eyes of the traveller through the Laurentian Mountains in the province of Quebec. As the road unwinds itself into the hills it discloses on either side a new Jerusalem. In cottages, colonies, boarding houses and hotels thousands of Jews glow and expand in the summer time, the season for their escape from the ubiquitous sidewalks and staircases of the city of Montreal and its environs. No wonder there is a lull in activities for Palestine. Here is a new Palestine where a Jew who could not express his true self, so to speak, would need the world to do it in. In certain spots along the way it is almost impossible to discover a face that is not a Jewish face and the impression received is that the Jewish people own the Laurentians. Non-Jews go deeper into the hills off the main highways into less frequented beauty places which they prefer. This leaves the Jew in possesion of an area where he can live for several months at least in the ways held out to him in Zionist propaganda for the upbuilding of the homeland. Whoever he is, he is a Jew surrounded by Jews. Often he can even shop at a Jewish store. He can feed his Jewish soul, his spirit can lift itself up without restraint. He can follow a line of conduct suited to his temperament. He can weep or shout with laughter, he can be vociferous with joy. He can forget a decorum made by people of different background and blood and he can wail or be merry with a fervour that would bewilder any Nordic neighbours of his city existence. A spot such as part of the Laurentians presents is of inestimable value to the Jew who regards everything outside of Palestine as the exile. It provides a safety valve in his emotional life through which to live his own life in summer. To the Jew who feels cramped and enclosed by the conceptions of decorum pronounced by people of another race, a summer playground dominated by Jews should be a boon and a godsend.

The Jews of this country are the most fortunate members of their race in the whole world. Then let them remember their stricken people in Palestine in the one way they can—by money contributions. Shaken with terror, wounded and homeless, those other Jews have the right to look this way for help. Don't fail them! Send what you can right away to the nearest Palestine Emergency Fund.

The Jewish Religious Union for the Advancement of Liberal Judaism, of London, England, writes to the Canadian Jewish Review to tell about the growth of Reform Judaism in England just about the time that the Conference of Anglo-Jewish Preachers heard from its speakers that something must be done. There are already three Liberal synagogues in London under the leadership of Rabbis I. I. Mattuck, Maurice L. Perlzweig and S. E. Starrels. A fourth has been founded in South London and will begin to hold services in September. Rabbi Perlzweig made a stay of three months in Liverpool where he organized a synagogue. Rabbi Morris Goldstein, formerly of Niagara Falls, N.Y., was inducted as minister. (Rabbis Mattuck and Starrels are also Americans.) For the first time in the history of the Liberal Jewish movement special services have been conducted for visitors at Brighton.

This column has no reason for banking on the growth of Liberal Judaism in England. It is merely betting on it as a detached observer jotting down the direction the wind blows. Orthodoxy in England has the same trials and tribulations that Orthodoxy has in this country and its death throes are against the inevitable. Some of the speakers at the Preachers' Conference looked kindly upon the changes which must make them at least Conservative. One of them said: "In extreme cases of danger to the persistence of the religious life, individual communities have the duty, not merely the right, to create new services to supplement the old. We need not fear that the mere accidental utilization of Sunday as being the most practicable day, because of the greater leisure enjoyed, will be misconstrued as an attempt to substitute Sunday for the historic Sabbath." Another speaker cautioned the assembly against methods that encouraged Reform Judaism. One man made a plea for attractive services. Another said the tide of Liberal Judaism was swelling. Reform was making great advance and if they desired to steam that tide they must pay attention to their own synagogues. All Reform started with dissatisfaction with the synagogue service.

In England as in America the Orthodox leaders have failed to consider the tide until it is upon them. They might have been warned long ago had they looked upon the life of their congregants with eyes that really saw. All about them from the high silk hats down they could have seen people violating the Sabbath and the dietary laws. They could have seen Jewish principles and practices disregarded and a joke made of sacred ceremonies. This should have told the Orthodox leaders that their hold was losing its grip; that to be consistently Orthodox a congregant must do more than go to schul on Yom Kippur—and much less than gamble on Friday evening.

To demand kosher in the winter and eat trefah in summer and to be as ridiculous as that with regard to other Jewish principles and to still maintain that he is strictly Orthodox labels the average congregant a hypocrite and temporizer. It is this fact that ruins his religion, the fact that humbug rules it. It would be better to leave out a few of the "thou shalt nots" from the circle that aspires to circumscribe the religious life of the man than to leave in those which he increasingly refuses to obey but still pretends to and still does lip service to at the cost of his inner self-respect.

Liberal Judaism understands this. One of the easiest things in the world is to live the religious life of the Reform Jew. He may believe much without the actual weight of observance. Under modern conditions and circumstances inimical to the maintenance of Orthodox Judaism, Reform Judaism offers leeway. It is no wonder that the drift is toward Reform. The wonder is that wisdom does not always carry with it understanding, an understanding which would help rabbis to take into consideration the facts of the every day life of their people. f.f.s.

INJURED PLAYING BALL

In the final game of the season, the Amicus beat the Trojans 15 to 8 to win the championship in the Independent Inter-Club League. The Amicus boys led all through the game scoring four runs in the first and second innings. Hy Stein and Nat Grossman played best for the winners. Minkin was best for the losers. The game was marred by an unfortunate accident when Mac Isenberg slipped while running at full speed and broke his arm. He was removed to the Western Hospital.

END OF ZIONISM SOUGHT BY MOSLEMS

The Arabs are determined to control Palestine even if it is necessary to defy Great Britain, according to Auni Abd-el-Hadi Sij, secretary of the Arab Executive, a prominent attorney, who acted as secretary to King Feisal of Iraq at the signing of the Versailles Treaty, to which he also affixed his signature. He made the assertion in an interview September 6.

Abd-El-Hadi was quite frank. He said the latest outbreaks, although in no wise of spontaneous nature, were, nevertheless, the results of clever propaganda. The Arab Executive for the last three years, he said, has been aiming at the creation of a situation with which the London Government would have to contend.

"We all know here," he declared, "that officials of the Palestine Government are absolutely opposed to the Balfour declaration. That is, they do not believe in the feasibility of its materialization. To this we Arabs agree completely, as from the very beginning we had declared ourselves opposed to the Zionist policy of the British Governments which have succeeded one another in London.

"It is for this reason that our Arab Executive decided not to utter a single word against the local government. Our sole criticism is against the London authorities.

"Palestine in our eyes is not a separate country, although the British have torn it from the main Arab body despite all their promises to our leaders during the World War.

"At our congress today we solemnly declared we would not budge from our conviction that Palestine must again form a part of the Arab Empire of our dreams.

"We know it is true that the British Government will never agree to abolish the Balfour declaration, but we also know that any local government which will be sent from London to rule Palestine inevitably will follow the path of the present local government, which is always most favorable to our ideas.

"A Jewish homeland cannot succeed because it is not natural.

"If the Zionist organization continues to lull itself in hopes that London will help them we shall see to it that this fourth revolt of ours (he emphasized the last words twice, implying that the riots of 1919, 1920 and 1921 were actually revolts) will not be the last one. British bayonets sent against us from London may force us into momentary submission, but even those soldiers soon sympathize with us, as we have proofs enough."

The Arab leader went on to say that the Arab Executive gave orders to the Arab population not to shoot at British troops even when these troops, blinded by London orders were shooting at them. In the last outbreaks the Arabs shot at Jews only; those Englishmen reported killed, he said, were the victims of stray bullets.

"It is our fondest hope that the English people will finally understand what a crime it committed against the Arab nation by issuing the Balfour Declaration, and we also are certain that the latest uprising will put an end to Jewish immigration and discourage Jewish capital from coming into the country.

Should we find out in the near future, however, that notwithstanding these hopes of ours the present crisis is not strong enough to destroy the Jewish homeland movement we shall not hesitate to bring about a strong well-organized fifth Arab revolt which would cause the British Empire more trouble than Abd-el-Krim's warfare did to France and Spain together.

"We have decided that every Arab shall now possess arms, regardless of whether the London Government wants it. We have no use for a standing British army here, as such an army defends the Jews and not the Arabs, who do not need defense."

Concluding the interview, Abd-el-Hadi said:

"I do not think that calm has been restored. Official communiqués may try to convey to the public here and in London that the uprising is subdued, but let me prophesy that we are just at the beginning of things and that any moment the fire may again be kindled.

"Tomorrow the second and last session of the Seventh Arab Congress will swear as one man not to give up before the national aspirations are realized. For the moment we may be satisfied with some new institution of the Balfour Declaration which will shrink it into a kind of spiritual home for the Jews or a definite and well delimited area somewhere in Palestine if the London Government would grant immediately a democratic government based on the de facto majority of the population as it is now composed.

"Such a government would not refuse to accept within it Jewish members in accordance with their proportion to the others, which we know, is but 12 per cent.

"This is the least we can ask at this juncture. Within a few weeks or months not even this will satisfy us, as we are certain of our victory. We are by no means anti-British, but if Great Britain is going to impose on us its Zionist policy, we shall find it necessary to fight it to our great regret."

Double Tragedy Overtakes Ball Team On Way To Game

Buoyant spirits upon the part of members of the Elizabeth baseball team, prospective winners of the bantam title of the province, were changed to gloom Saturday when, on their way to Peterboro to play a crucial game, their captain and another team mate sustained fatal injuries in a motor crash near Newcastle.

Benjamin Wetstein, 15, of 25 Oxford St., captain of the team, and Nathan Rubinoff, 15, of 362 Markham St., were the two victims, whose deaths occurred Sunday in the Bowmanville hospital.

Their injuries resulted from the collision which occurred head-on, with a motor car from Buffalo, driven by J. L. Schalk. The crash is declared to have been due to the failure of the car in which the Elizabeth team was riding to pass another car on the highway.

Robert Abate, of Beatrice St., driver of the Elizabeth team's car, and a local trainer of amateur youths, was arrested on a charge of criminal negligence and released on $10,000 bail.

Others involved in the collision, whose injuries were not serious were: Lewis Brooks, Major St.; Sollie Sone, Nassau St.; Harry Pepperman, Oxford St., passengers in the Toronto car, and Joseph Wren, Selwood Ave., Toronto, and Percy Murray, Williamsville, N. Y., passengers in the Buffalo car.

The intended ball game with the Peterboro team was never played.

At two o'clock Sunday many cars were lined up in front of the Wetstein home on Oxford St. Bennie's friends were his pallbearers. They were: Harry Sniderman, Alex. Levinskey, A. Eisen, Morris Shapiro, Louis Rubin, Harry Tepperman, J. Minkowitz, and H. Eisen.

Bennie had just passed his entrance at Lansdowne School, and was about to enter Central Technical School. He was an all-round athlete, playing hockey, basketball and baseball. He was captain and catcher of the Elizabeth team.

The funeral of Nathan Rubinoff started at five o'clock. Friends who knew Bennie also knew Nathan, the short-stop for the Elizabeth home team. They gathered at the home at 362 Markham St. Amongst them was "Bob" Abate, driver of the car, on Saturday.

Rev. B. C. Nathanson, grandfather of Rubinoff, conducted the service for the dead boy at the graveside.

Besides his father and mother, the boy leaves three brothers, Morris, Willie and Able.

Traffic light signals were suspended and policemen were stationed along the route of the funeral procession to give it the right of way.

The two boys whose lives were so closely linked together, will not be separated by death, for in two adjoining plots their bodies were buried. In the cemetery of the Workmen's Circle lies Wetstein, and next door, in the Jewish National Workers' Association, Rubinoff is buried.

Deaths

Rae Cainer Clapham, age 48, wife of Sam Clapham, 469 Danforth Avenue, died at the Western Hospital September 6. The funeral was held from her home Sunday, September 8, at 12.30. Surviving are her father, Simon Cainer, of Leeds, England, her husband and children, Donald, Beatrice, Noel, Abe and Shirley; one sister, Mrs. Fanny Victor, of London, England; and two brothers, Gerald Cainer and David Cainer, of Toronto.

Marriages

Hersenhoren-Moldaver

Mr. and Mrs. O. Moldaver, 42 Beatrice Street, announce the marriage of their second daughter, Gertrude, to Leslie Hersenhoren, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Hersenhoren, Glenholme Avenue. Friday, September 6th, at 5:30. Reverend Gringorten performed the ceremony. The couple are spending their honeymoon in New York and on their return will live in Toronto.

Levine-Altman

The marriage of Shirley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Altman, 2 Hilton Street, to Thomas Levine, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. Levine, 286 Queen Street West, was solemnized Tuesday, September 13, at Goel Tzedek Synagogue, University Avenue. Rabbi S. Sachs and Rabbi M. Elstein performed the ceremony. The synagogue was decorated with a mass of flowers, palms and ferns. During the ceremony Mrs. Leo A. McIlveer sang, "Because." The bride who was given in marriage by her father, wore a bridal gown of egg shell satin, with long Chantilly lace sleeves. The skirt was made in drape effect forming a short train at the back, her veil of tulle was bounded with rose point lace and caught at the head with orange blossoms, and she carried a shower bouquet of ophelia roses, lilies-of-the valley and orchids. Miss Rose Altman, was her sister's maid-of-honour, in a gown of capucine chiffon with uneven hemline, and carried an arm bouquet of red roses. The bridesmaids were Miss Mary Ross of Ottawa, in green taffeta, trimmed with black and gold, the black taffeta forming a wide band at the hemline with a soft bow of black and green caught at the back of the gown. Miss Lillian Suroff, wore a gown of green moiré with side drape and uneven hemline. Miss Mavis Sagman, of New York, wore a dress of coral taffeta made in bouffant style, bustle trimmed with sequin and steel beads, and a large bow of the same material was tied at the front of the gown. They all wore shoes to match their gowns and carried arm bouquets of roses. Joyce Isaacs, cousin of the groom, was flower girl, dressed in pale green frilled chiffon over net and carried a basket of rose petals. Ben Shore was best man and the ushers were George Altman, George Levine and Bert Ross. After the ceremony the bride and groom with their parents received congratulations at the Knights of Columbus Hall, where a dinner was served to 200 guests. Mrs. H. Altman, mother of the bride, wore a gown of mauve georgette with beaded trimmings and corsage of roses. Mrs. B. Levine, mother of the groom, was dressed in black chiffon with side drape and corsage of roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Later in the evening a reception and dance was held to 100 guests. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Levine are spending their honeymoon motoring to New York, Atlantic City, Philadelphia, North Carolina, the Blue Ridge Mountains and will return home along the St. Lawrence, Montreal and Quebec. The bride travelled in an ensemble of brown and sand, with brown suede shoes, brown hat and silver fox fur, the gift of the groom. Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Goodman, of Montreal, Mrs. J. Abrams, of Chicago; S. Rothman, of Montreal; Mrs. A Sagman, Misses Edith and Mavis Sagman, of New York; Miss Mary Ross, and Mr. and Mrs. Eli Barnett, of Ottawa; and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Barnett, of Detroit. Mr. and Mrs. Levine will live in Toronto.

You can depend on the GAS REFRIGERATOR

Taste is not a dependable test of food purity. The temperature test is better and surer. If the thermometer shows a steady coldness of less than 50° F., then, and then only, can you say that you have safe refrigeration.

The gas refrigerator gives this dependability and keeps on giving it. A tiny gas flame and a trickle of water do all the work of making cold. The action is simple and silent. See the gas refrigerator at our booth in the Exhibition.

TORONTO JEWS GIVE $10,000

Ten thousand dollars has been raised among local Jews for the Palestine emergency relief fund, and has been sent to the Dominion headquarters at Montreal. Within a couple of days it will be received in Jerusalem and applied on relief for Jewish sufferers in the Holy Land.

Representatives of 129 Jewish organizations gathered in the Zionist building Monday night, and after speakers had given accounts of the plight of Palestine Jews, many donations to the fund were made.

An organization to conduct an intensive campaign in Toronto was formed. M. Gelber was made honorary chairman, and other officers elected were: Sam Kronick, chairman; Mrs. David Dunkelman, A. Rhinewine and W. Weinstock joint vice-chairmen. Sigmund Samuel, honourary treasurer, David Dunkelman, treasurer; B. Vise and C. Benjamin, joint secretaries; A. Rhinewine, A. B. Bennett and Mrs. J. Smith, publicity committee. Temporary headquarters are at 206 Beverley street, but a central headquarters is to be established in the business district.

Memorial meetings are being held this week by the Hadassah chapters, and a mass memorial meeting for women is to be held on Sunday afternoon in the University ave. synagogue.

Junior Hadassah chapters and other junior organizations have volunteered to take charge of theatre stations, while the Hadassah chapters will staff the receiving stations in the business and residential districts. The general committee will have supervision at the central headquarters.

Motion picture theatres throughout the Dominion are co-operating in the present appeal, it was stated by Mrs. J. Smith, and it is hoped in this way to intimately reach many thousands of people. The Hadassah chapters all over Canada are taking a leading part in the drive, but so greatly has the trouble in Palestine affected the Jewish women of Canada that all of them, whether Hadassah members or not, are eager to give their services.

Mrs. A. J. Freiman, National chairman of the Palestine Emergency Relief Fund, has been in Toronto since Sunday taking an active part in organization for the local appeal.

A special tax on synagogue seats is to be levied, according to a decision reached at the meeting, and during the approaching High Holidays collections will be confined to the Palestine relief fund.

The committee in charge of the general mass meeting is composed of Mrs. D. Dunkelman, Mrs. L. M. Schwartz, Mrs. M. Johnson, Mrs. Dineberg, Mrs. A. L. Willinsky, Mrs. Rotenberg, Mrs. F. James and Mrs. Kramer.

Press dispatches quoting the Grand Mufti as charging Jews with responsibility for the outbreaks in Palestine caused a reply to be issued by the committee in charge of the relief fund.

The reply asserts that the Grand Mufti merely indulges in generalities and that his statement is in itself an arraignment of the Arabs.

"He further states that if the Arab attacks had been premeditated, other steps would have been taken for simultaneous attacks on all other Jewish colonies with the cutting of the telephone and telegraph lines and similar which had not been adopted," the reply of the local Jews adds, and continues:

"The fact that the Arabs did not do as much damage as they might have done does not exonerate them, but only shows that the Arabs who were in charge of the massacres were not as thorough as the Grand Mufti would have been."

Statements recently published by Premier Ramsay MacDonald, Rt. Hon. Arthur Henderson, Lord Passfield and Sir John Chancellor, High Commissioner of Palestine, all recognized that the Arabs were the guilty party, the reply points out.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water-power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

entrust myself, therefore, to the indulgence and tolerance of my gentle readers.

That I shall be happy in your midst, I have not the slightest doubt. I have thrilled afresh at each new experience ever since I first set foot—or more exactly, since I first set inflated tires—upon Canadian sod. Yours—or may I already say, ours—is a wondrous country; its possibilities seem limitless. In some respects it is virgin soil, hungering for the fructifying seed of liberal thought and breadth of vision. It lacks much of the stultification and stratification so general in the States. It appears as though it were just becoming conscious of itself and its boundless potentialities. With incredible swiftness, it is growing materially and physically. Is it too much to antic pate the development and deepening of its spiritual resources as well? To this task: to the growth and progress of the spiritual life in this great land of my new adoption, to the intensification of Jewish life and spirit within its borders, to the shattering of prejudices and the broadening of vistas, to the championing of prophetic ideals and the dissemination of growing truth, to the furtherance of good will, tolerance, peace and happiness between man and man, to all this, I would dedicate these my weekly editorials. Opposition they will no doubt evoke. Differences of opinion are bound to arise? Nor will these be unwelcome. They can but challenge and stimulate. I earnestly invite them, rejoicing that at least this magazine, a pioneer in the realm of free expression, gives full rein to all opinion, all points of view, all philosophies and judgments and permits to each, in true liberality of spirit, his own interpretation of Judaism and of life.

In the hope that, through these columns, I may extend my voice and teaching far beyond the limits of my pulpit and thus be of influence and power in the fashioning and moulding of Canadian Jewish thought; in the faith that I may acquire, thdough my heartfelt efforts, some few, but faithful, friends and followers, I greet you all, my as yet unknown readers, trusting fervidly that we shall enjoy together a pleasant and profitable chat in this little corner each and every week.

Although the columns of the Review have been filled with news and pertinent comment with regard to the grim and gory tragedy which has befallen our brethren in Palestine, I cannot refrain from adding to my greetings above, my own deepest sympathy for those who have been so miserably and so unjustly afflicted, and my prayer that abundant streams of generous contributions will flow toward the stricken and the famished, and that sure and speedy justice be done.

THE TORONTO PRESS AND THE PALESTINE RIOTS

Complaints have been voiced in some Jewish circles against the attitude of the Toronto English Press towards the Palestine situation. The action of the Star in running, on two separate occasions, full page head lines featuring Arab statements, which were transparently false, has in particular, occasioned bitter disappointment.

In the past the local daily press has not been unfair to the Jews. After all, the editors and staffs of the papers are non-Jews, and many facts which are commonplace to us do not come within the range of their interest. Moreover news is gathered, and editorial comments are written in daily papers in a great hurry. Understandable lack of information and hurried treatment may therefore often be confused with malice, where ill-will is not intended.

In dealing with the Palestine incident, the local press seem to have got the notion that the Jewish people, in their grief and anxiety, and in their feelings against the Arab rioters, have declared a sort of war against Great Britain.

The fact of the matter is that Jews, not only in Canada, but everywhere, realize that in the final analysis there is no country or empire in the world from whom the Jewish people can expect as fair or as competent treatment of their national aspirations as from the British Empire. The Palestine riots have come as a great shock to the Jews everywhere. Somebody was responsible for the outrages. It did not take long to discover that the blame was attachable to certain classes of Arab intriguers, and in a large measure to a section of the Palestine Officialdom. Now it is evident that neither the Arab agitators nor the group of lax officials in Palestine are synonymous with the British Government or the British Empire. Jews may rightly and justifiably condemne the guilty parties without being charged with poor political sense in non-British countries, and sedition in Canada.

We believe that the true position of the Jews has now become clear to the press, and we can now expect genuine sympathy from them in our affliction, and support in our relief endeavors. We are not asking for any favoritism. We want facts to be presented to the public fairly and truthfully. Our responsible leaders can co-operate with the press, by placing at their disposal necessary information which they may possess, and which may not be accessible to the latter in the ordinary course. In the present instance our position would have been helped if a proper presentation of the Jewish views were furnished to the public by responsible spokesmen, in time. Misunderstandings have been allowed to gain headway without any fair attempts at checking them.

JOURNEY'S E D

Will be shown at His Majesty, hey Dept. s

It is indeed rare that a play, irrespective of how well it be written and how well acted, should, figuratively speaking, set an entire nation by its ears and become the common topic of its people. It is even rarer that newspapers should coin a slogan for a play which almost immediately becomes a shibboleth for civilization at large.

And yet one play has created a pat'n that it has affected one nation already and should similarly affect the world at large. The drama referred to is called "Journey's End" by R. C. Sherriff which Gilbert Miller is presenting by arrangement with Maurice Browne, at Henry Miller's Theatre.

"Journey's End" has been called "the play that should end War." This may seem like an impossible task, which it undoubtedly is, but nevertheless the fact remains that having seen it few people will leave the theatre with any cherished notions of modern warfare other than that of futility. Mr. Sherriff has already been mentioned for the Nobel Peace Award for his remarkable drama, which ranks with H. G. Wells' "Mr. Britling Sees It Through" and Raymond Dargelas' "Les Croix de Bois" as being among the finest literature that the war has produced.

All of this would leave one with the idea that "Journey's End" resolves itself into a tract against war and strife. But it is hardly that. It is three solid hours of sheer entertainment, depicting many more difficulty than any story yet told of what it was like "out there." For all its stalwart and sentimental drama, it is more revealing than any play in town. It is full of the humour of simplicity which is life.

It was thought impossible that ten years after the Great War, a play dealing with the late German should have any popular appeal. But from the first presentation, "Journey's End" created such a sensation in staid London that British critics have simply been vieing with themselves in an effort to outwrite each other in the matter of superlatives.
